Abstract

This research is based on the analysis of phraseological units containing animals in the source language – English and in the target language – Croatian. There are three major parts of this research. The first part gives a theoretical background of phraseology in general and phraseological units as the focus of the research. In the second part, the source and the target of the research are presented, as well as the process of constructing the corpus. For this research, 13 dictionaries and 2 online sources were used for identifying, analysing and translating phraseological units. The third part consists of an in-depth analysis of 30 phraseological units from the corpus of altogether 628 phraseological units. The research also contains an appendix, in which the corpus, the list of abbreviations used in the research, and diagrams are attached. The first diagram presents the frequency of a particular animal species in phraseological units used in corpus. The second one examines the frequency of the thirty analysed idioms used in the research. Finally, the third diagram demonstrates the frequency of lexical equivalence in translation of analysed phraseological units, i.e. frequency of complete, partial and zero equivalence in the target language.

1 Introduction

This research is based on the analysis of phraseological units containing animals in the source language, i.e. English, and its translation in the target language, i.e. Croatian. The research is divided in three main parts – theoretical background, research design and corpus analysis.

As the entire research deals with phraseological units, the purpose of the theoretical background is to clarify some basic terms associated with them, such as their characteristics, classification and translation. Some fundamental information about phraseology in general is also given.

The second part elaborates on the source and target of the corpus – dictionaries used for identifying phraseological units in the source language and their corresponding counterparts in the target language. Furthermore, the process of building a corpus and the pattern of the analysis of phraseological units is described.

The last part of the research contains an in-depth analysis of 30 phraseological units, which were chosen from the corpus consisting of altogether 628 phraseological units. These are accompanied by definitions in both source and target language and examples in source language. For most of them, the origin is also given.

At the end of the research, the appendix containing corpus, diagrams and the list of used abbreviations is attached. The first diagram demonstrates the frequency of the thirty analysed idioms used in this research. Similarly, the second diagram discusses the frequency of a particular animal species in phraseological units used in corpus. The third diagram shows the frequency of lexical equivalence in translation of analysed phraseological units.

2 Theoretical background

2.1 Phraseology and the phraseological unit

Phraseology is defined as the part of linguistics that studies fixed expression. According to Sabine Fiedler this term can also be used to denote the set of linguistic units that are investigated in this field. The analysed subject is called phraseological unit and it forms the phrasicon, i.e. the inventory of idioms and phrases (Fiedler 2007: 15). Phraseology can also be seen as „a crucial mechanism contributing to the formation and reinforcement of a cultural identity“ (Cowie 1998: 8).
Phraseological units are used on a regular basis by speakers of various languages and their importance lies in the fact that they are often specific for the tradition and culture of a particular nation. Phraseological unit is “a lexicalized, reproducible bilexemic or polylexemic word group in common use, which has relative syntactic and semantic stability, may be idiomatized, may carry connotations, and may have an emphatic or intensifying function in a text” (Gläser 1998: 124-125). There are several criteria that define and form a phraseological unit. One common mistake is equalization of a term “idiom” with a phraseological unit, whereas an idiom is only its subtype, which is “a lexicalized, reproducible word group in common use, which has syntactic and semantic stability, and may carry connotations, but whose meaning cannot be derived from the meanings of its constituents (Gläser 1998: 125).

2.2 The criteria for defining a phraseological unit

2.2.1 Polylexemic structure

The criterion which defines a PU as a polylexemic item, i.e. an item which consist of minimum two independent words, is rather arguable. Changing a phraseological unit into a compound is one example of this issue. An expression “to catch somebody’s eye” which is transformed in a compound “eye-catcher” illustrates this problem. The meaning stays the same even after changing the structure. Some of them even have a structure of one or several sentences, for example: “Birds of feather flock together”. Therefore, another difficulty is setting the upper limit for PUs. (Fiedler 2007: 17)

2.2.2 Stability

The feature that separates the PU from other combinations of words is its relative stability in semantic and syntactic structure (Fiedler 2007: 20). Phraseological units rarely change their meaning because it takes a lot of time for it to be established in a language. The most of PUs are syntactically stable, however, they “may vary in their stability in that they encompass constituents which allow variations within the constraints of the lexicological/phraseological system” (Gläser 1998: 128). For instance: “Shut the stable door after the horse has bolted” or “Lock the stable door after the horse is stolen”
2.2.3 Lexicalization

The term of lexicalization is closely linked to the stability of a PU. It describes acceptance of a PU in a language. The process of lexicalization occurs when there’s a need to describe a new word. Not every expression becomes accepted, but they originate from all fields of social life, such as politics, entertainment, medicine. (Fiedler 2007: 21)

2.2.4 Idiomaticity

Idiomaticity is a feature that is not essential for all PUs, only some of them have it. It describes the phenomenon where the meaning is difficult or impossible to understand from the given words, e.g. “kick the bucket” (Fiedler 2007: 22). PUs have different degrees of Idiomaticity. They can be fully opaque, e.g. “jump the shark” or fully transparent, e.g. “of course”.

2.2.5 Connotations

Connotations are “additional semantic markers which are associated with the value judgements of a speech community (i.e. a class or social group) or of an individual speaker or writer” (Gläser 1998: 127). They are used to provoke an emotion or to emphasise something that is said or written. There are two types of connotations – stylistic and expressive. Stylistic connotations are ones that are normally used in a conversation and they vary from formal to informal, e.g. foreign, colloquial slang, etc. Expressive connotations express one’s attitude about a certain topic. For instance, they are marked as euphemistic, derogatory, humorous, etc. According to Gläser, connotations have one additional type – register markers. These register markers “appear in the dictionary ( . . . ) as references to a particular field or province of discourse, e.g. 'med(ical)', 'phys(ics)', 'leg(al)’” (Gläser 1998: 128).

2.3 Translating Phraseological Units

Learning the meaning and how to use different types of phraseological units is challenging for a learner of a foreign language as well as for the native speaker. But the most challenging thing is translating phraseological units from one language into another. The reason for that is the complexity and specificity of the lexis of a certain language. It is important to remember that “in the translation process the linguistic unit of the source language does not always coincide with that of the target language” (Gläser 1984: 121)
According to Sabine Fiedler (2007: 115-130) certain steps are to be followed when translating:

1. The identification of a PU
2. The analysis of the phraseological meaning
3. Translation in the strict sense – transferring a paraphrase from the source language to the target language
4. Completion of the translation process – producing an expressive and well-formed text

Fiedler (2007: 115-130) also suggests several techniques that can be used when translating phraseological units:

1. Finding equivalent
2. Paraphrase
3. Literal translation
4. Omission

There are three types of lexical equivalence, which need to be taken into consideration in contrastive analysis – complete, partial and zero equivalence. Complete equivalence includes “a congruence of identity of the denotational (. . .) meaning, and also of the connotational, expressive (. . .) and stylistic meanings” (Gläser 1984: 124). For instance, ‘Adam’s apple’ and ‘Adamova jabuka’. Partial equivalence implies the difference in “[the] referential base of a metaphor or metonymy [and] their connotational and stylistic meanings” (Gläser 1984: 125). To exemplify, ‘be an albatross around your neck’ and ‘biti kamen oko vrata’. Zero equivalence is very rare because “even if there is no approximate expression in the target language, (. . .) a paraphrase of the denotational meaning of the idiom of the source language is possible, although (. . .) connotations (. . .) may not be represented adequately in the target language (. . .), [however, this] does not mean a gap in the notional or conceptual system of a language, but a different ordering of reality in linguistic terms”. (Gläser 1984: 126-127). For example, ‘a fly in the ointment’ and ‘jedina kvaka’.
3 Research design

3.1 Source and target

This research studies idioms with animals in English as the source language and their equivalents in Croatian as the target language. 13 dictionaries have been used in this research. Four dictionaries have been used for the identification of phraseological units and the construction of corpus, whereas the other 9 have been used for the in-depth analysis of 30 idioms.

3.2 Description of corpus

The process of identifying the phraseological units:

1) Identifying PUs and their Croatian counterparts in the dictionary
2) Noting the identified PUs
3) Providing example sentences, definitions in source and target language, counterpart in the target language, and origin for the PU
4) Determining the type of equivalence (complete, partial or zero equivalence)

The templates used for the corpus analysis were the coursebook English Phraseology by Sabine Fiedler (2007: 120) and Rosmarie Gläser’s article “The Translation Aspect of Phraseological Units in English and German”.

The entire corpus consists of 628 phraseological units and their counterparts in Croatian. However, for this research 30 randomly selected idioms have been analysed.

4 Corpus analysis

1. a fly in the ointment
   a. We enjoyed the play, but the fly in the ointment was not being able to find our car afterward. (AID 120)
   b. a small, unpleasant matter that spoils something; a drawback (AID 120)
   c. neprilika, problem, smetnja (EFR 82); smetati, priječiti (na putu prema uspjehu) (EFR 158); jedini problem (EHFR 78)
   d. jedina kvaka (EHFR 78)
   e. zero equivalence
According to The American Heritage Dictionary of Idioms, this term probably alludes to the biblical proverb "Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour" from Ecclesiastes 10:1 [c. 1600] (p. 350).

2. a wild-goose chase
   a. First my cousin told me I could buy what I needed at one store; then she sent me to three more. I never did find it. She sent me on a wild-goose chase. (ITL 99)
   b. a purposeless errand, a pointless exercise, a waste of time (DoI 200)
   c. bezuspješno tražiti nešto, jaložna potraga (EFR 37); uzaludan trud, jalov pothvat (EFR 93)
   d. ćorav posao (CEDoI 596)
   e. zero equivalence

There are three explanations of the origin of this phrase. According to Dictionary of Idioms, it can be traced back to the sixteenth century. Its meaning is obscure, but it may be related to the erratic movements of wild geese which make them extremely difficult to catch (DoI 200-201). As stated in In the Loop, this expression was first recorded in the Shakespeare’s play Romeo and Juliet and at that time actually referred to horse racing. A wild-goose chase was a kind of horse racing in which the horses run in a V-like formation, which is similar to the way birds fly. In the course of time, this connection was lost so people assumed the phrase came from flying geese (p. 99). The explanation in Oxford Idiom Dictionary is also related to a sport that involves horses, in which horse riders had to follow the exact course taken by the first rider like the way that geese fly by following a leader (p. 448).

3. act/play the goat
   a. I’ve never been sure why we choose the first day of April to act the goat. (CEDOI 240)
   b. deliberately to behave in a silly or eccentric way; to play the fool (EID 1)
   c. glupirati se
   d. izvoditi bijesne gliste (CEDOI 240)
   e. partial equivalence

4. be an albatross around your neck
   a. That car costs you so much to repair. It has become an albatross around your neck. Why don’t you get rid of it? (ITL 1)
b. something or someone that is a burden and difficult to get rid of (ITL 1)
c. teška briga, opterečenje (HEFR 93)
d. biti kamen na/o vratu komu (CEDOI 303)
e. partial equivalence

Both In the Loop (p. 2) and The American Heritage Dictionary of Idioms (p.19) ascribe this idiom to the English poet Samuel T. Coleridge and his poem “The Rime of the Ancient Mariner”, in which a sailor kills an albatross with his crossbow. As their ship gets stranded, the whole crew blames the sailor for this bad luck and makes him wear the albatross around his neck as punishment. Both Coleridge’s poem and this expression are based on a superstition that it is unlucky to kill the albatross.

There is another idiom in English, which has the same connotation as this expression, and that is ‘a monkey on your back’ (TAHDoI 689).

5. be in the catbird seat
   a. I hold all the aces. I’m in the catbird seat. (DOAI 341)
   b. in a dominant or controlling position (DOAI 341)
   c. biti u jakoj poziciji, kontrolirati situaciju (EHFR 176)
   d. biti na konju
   e. zero equivalence

This term, which was popularized by the sportscaster Red Barber in the 1940s, is related to catbird’s high perch (TAHDoI 176).

There are another two translations suggested in the target language, i.e. Croatian, but they do not involve an animal – ‘držati konce u svojim rukama’ (EHFR 176) and ‘držati komande’ (HEFR 103).

6. be like a bear with a sore head
   a. She’s like a bear with a sore head in the mornings. (OID 20)
   b. very bad-tempered (OID 20)
   c. biti jako mrzovoljan (EFR 221); biti uzrujan (EFR 18)
   d. biti kao razjareni bik (EFR 221); biti napet kao struna (EFR 18); biti sav jedan živac (EHFR 14)
   e. zero equivalence
‘Biti napet kao struna’ (EFR 18) and ‘biti sav jedan živac’ (EHFR 14) are another two expressions which can be used for translating the English expression ‘be like a bear with a sore head’. Another translation suggested by Croatian-English Dictionary of Idioms (325) is ‘kao pokisla kokoš’, but in the context of this phraseological unit, it could be regarded as a mistranslation.

7. be like a bull in a china shop
   a. I never know what to say at a funeral. I feel like a bull in a china shop, trampling on feelings without even meaning to. (DoAI 70)
   b. a very clumsy creature in a delicate situation (DoAI 70)
   c. vrlo nespretan (EFR 31)
   d. kao slon u staklani (EFR 31)
   e. partial equivalence

This expression, which was recorded for the first time in the novel Jacob Faithful by Frederick Marryat in 1834 is still of unknown origin, as it is stated in The American Heritage Dictionary of Idioms (p. 143).

Similarly to ‘kao slon u staklani’, another translation is suggested by Croatian-English Dictionary of Idioms (p. 705) and that is ‘ponašati se kao slon u staklani’.

8. beard the lion in his den
   a. He said he hadn’t wanted to come to my home, but it was better to beard the lion in his den. (EID 8)
   b. to face an adversary on the adversary’s home ground (EID 8)
   c. oštro komu odgovoriti (EFR 18)
   d. izazvati koga na njegovu teritoriju (EFR 18)
   e. zero equivalence

This expression has several possible origins. The American Heritage Dictionary of Idioms states that it was originally a Latin proverb from a tale in the Bible (I Samuel 17:35) about the shepherd David, who caught a lion by its beard and killed it because it had stolen a lamb. The original variant – ‘beard the lion’ – has an extended variant – ‘beard the lion in his den’ – because of which it is also connected to another story from the Bible (Daniel 6:16-24), in which Daniel was shut in a lions’ den during the night. (p. 77)

9. buy a pig in a poke
a. I just took the salesman’s word that this camera worked. I guess I bought a pig in a poke. (DoAI 77)
b. to buy something without looking inside first (DoAI 77)
c. kupiti što bez provjere i prevariti se (EHFR 156)
d. kupiti mačka u vreći (EHFR 156)
e. partial equivalence

According to The American Heritage Dictionary of Idioms (p. 809-810) and Dictionary of Idioms (p. 146), the origin of this expression comes from a common practice of tricking buyers when buying a piglet. Some dishonest merchants would replace a worthy piglet with a worthless object, usually a cat. The new owner would discover this trickery at home by opening the bag. This expression is closely related to ‘let the cat out of the bag’. This phraseological unit was first recorded in John Heywood’s collection of proverbs.

10. a cock-and-bull story

a. The driver tried to explain his way out of getting a speeding ticket by inventing a cock-and-bull story. (ITL 16)
b. a story that is too unlikely to be believed (ITL 16)
c. izmišljotina, neuvjerljiva priča (EFR 230)
d. lovačka priča

e. partial equivalence

There is no certain origin for this expression, but it is estimated that it appeared around 1600. According to In the Loop (p. 16) and The American Heritage Dictionary of Idioms (p. 202) may originate from an English fable, in which the main characters were a cock and a bull and they led unbelievable conversations. Another theory is that this expression came “from the name of an English coaching inn where travellers often told such tales” (TAHDoI 202). As stated in The American Heritage Dictionary of Idioms (p. 202), this phraseological unit was first used in the Savoy Opera The Yeomen of the Guard (1888) by W.S. Gilbert. In this opera Jack Point and Wilfred the Jailer make up a story about the hero’s fictitious death: “Tell a tale of cock and bull, Of convincing detail full” (TAHDoI 202).

There are two suggested spelling variants for the English phraseological unit – one with a hyphen and one without a hyphen. Another translation in Croatian is ‘priča iz mlinice’ (EHFR 192). This expression can also be used with a verb ‘give’ or ‘feed’ and in this case, the translation could be ‘prodavati fore/štosove/štoseve’ (CEDoI 203).
11. eat crow

a. Roger told his daughter that he didn’t believe her. When he found out he was wrong, he had to eat crow and admit his mistake. (ITL 23)

b. to humble oneself because one has been proved wrong (ITL 23)

c. priznati svoju pogrešku (HEFR 185)

d. posuti se pepelom, „progutati“ što (EFR 49); posuti se pepelom, polizati što si rekao (EHFR 46); gutati knedle (CEDoI 322)

e. zero equivalence

The origin of this phraseological unit has been lost. It may come from a story of the War of 1812, when a British officer coerced an American soldier into eating part of a crow he had shot in the British territory. It is questionable whether this expression is related to the story. Nevertheless, it is possible that it comes from the fact that crow meat tastes terrible (TAHDoI 299).

There are other suggested translations for this phraseological unit, such as ’progutati što’ (EFR 49) and ’gutati knedle’ (CEDoI 322). Although ’gutati knedle’ is usually connected with fear or suppressing one’s urge to cry, it can be used in the context of humility.

12. get something/come straight from the horse’s mouth

a. This comes from the horse’s mouth, so it has to be believed. (AID 381)

b. from an authoritative or dependable source (AID 381)

c. doznati što izravno, bez posrednika (HEFR 216)

d. dobiti vijest iz prve ruke; znati iz prve ruke (EHFR 138)

e. zero equivalence

There are two possible explanations of the origin of this expression. Firstly, according to In the Loop (p. 85) and The American Heritage Dictionary of Idioms (p. 369) this expression might have originated in the practice of examining a horse’s teeth to determine its age and consequently its worth. This seemed to be the most valid source of information about the horse. This may be traced back to 1920s. Another explanation, suggested by Oxford Idiom Dictionary (p. 186), comes from a humorous suggestion that it could be heard from the horse whether it would win the race.

13. go to the dogs

a. This restaurant used to be so fashionable and classy, but it has gone to the dogs since it changed management. (ITL 37)

b. to fall into disrepair; to deteriorate (ITL 37)

c. propasti (EFR 59); izjaloviti se (EFR 92)
d. poći po zlu (EFR 59); otići kvragu (EHFR 54)
e. partial equivalence

‘Go to the dogs’ comes from a common belief that dogs were inferior creatures. It dates back to 1600s (TAHDoI 434).

Another variant of the Croatian phraseological unit ‘poći po zlu’ is ‘krenuti po zlu’ (EFR 92). There is also one other translation suggested: ‘pasti na niske grane’ (CEDoI 250)

14. have a bee in one's bonnet
   a. I had a bee in my bonnet about swimming. I couldn’t stop wanting to go swimming. (EID 68)
   b. to have an idea or a thought remain in one’s mind; to have an obsession (EID 68)
   c. biti opsjednut kakvom ludom mišljju (HEFR 81)
   d. imati bubu/bube u glavi (NJHER 77); imati mušice u glavi/fiksnu ideju (EFR19)
   e. partial equivalence

   The expression ‘have bees in one’s bonnet’ comes from the second half of 1600s. Its previous form was ‘have bees in one's head’. It is believed that the buzzing of a bee in one’s hat causes weird ideas in one’s head (TAHDoI 84).

15. (you) have bats in your belfry; have bats in the belfry
   a. You must have bats in your belfry if you think your parents will let you see that movie. (ITL 4)
   b. be crazy or eccentric (OID 19)
   c. imati čudne, nastrane misli, biti ćaknut, šašav (EHFR 13)
   d. imati bube u glavi (EHFR 13); (ti) nisi čist (CEDoI 119)
   e. zero equivalence

   A belfry is the tower of a church where the bell hangs, and is a symbol for somebody’s head. If a person has room for bats in his head, it means that his head is empty, i.e. he has no brains. (ITL 4) ‘Bat’ is used in this expression because its erratic flight symbolizes the ideas flying around in a person’s head. It dates back to early 1900s (TAHDoI 76).

16. have kittens
   a. My mother pretty near had kittens when she found out I got fired. (DoAI 289)
   b. become extremely upset (TAHDoI 463)
   c. dosadivati se čekajući (EHFR 117)
d. dobiti mačiće (EHFR 117)
e. complete equivalence

The term ‘have kittens’ “allud[es] to being so upset as to bear kittens” and it dates back to 1900 (TAHDoI 464).

Another expression, which can be used for translation of the English phraseological unit is ‘dobiti mlade’ (EHFR 117)

17. let the cat out of the bag

a. We are planning a surprise party for Jane. Don’t let the cat out of the bag. (AID 246-247)
b. to reveal a secret or a surprise by accident (AID 246)
c. odati tajnu (EFR 14); otkriti tajnu (EFR 129)
d. dati što na sva zvona (EHFR 34)
e. zero equivalence

This phraseological unit comes from mid-1700s and it is related to another expression – ‘buy a pig in a poke’. As stated in In the Loop (p. 54) and in The American Heritage Dictionary of Idioms (p. 618), many merchants sold piglets in bags and some of them replaced expensive piglets with a cat. The buyer would discover this deceit at home when the bag was opened and the cat let out.

18. (be) like a cat on hot bricks/a hot tin roof

a. Nervous about the lecture he had to give, David was like a cat on hot bricks. (TAHDoI 624)
b. restless or skittish, unable to remain still (TAHDoI 624)
c. vrlo nestrpljiv, nemiran (EFR 35)
d. biti kao na žeravici (EHFR 34); biti (kao) na iglama (CEDoI 274); be like a cat on a hot tin roof/hot bricks = biti/sjediti kao na žeravici (CEDoI 905)
e. zero equivalence

Earlier, this expression had another form – ‘like a cat on a hot bake-stone’ – and it was found in John Ray’s Proverbs in 1678. The phraseological unit ‘(be) like a cat on a hot tin roof’ became popular because of the play Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (1955) by Tennessee Williams (TAHDoI 624).

19. (look) like something that cat dragged/brought in a. Where have you been? You look like something the cat dragged in! (OID 53)

b. (look) dirty and untidy (OID 53)
c. izgledati prljavo, neuredno
d. kao da su te našli na smetlištu (EHFR 34); kao da su krave sažvakale (CEDoI 366); izgledati kao strašilo (HEFR 239)
e. partial equivalence

This term dates from around 1920 and it “alludes to a cat's bringing home birds or mice it has killed or savaged” (HEFR 239).

20. live in cloud-cuckoo-land
   a. Anyone who thinks this project will be finished within six weeks is living in cloud-cuckoo land. (TFD)
   b. to believe that things you want will happen, when really they are impossible (TFD)
   c. sanjariti (EFR 133)
   d. živjeti u oblacima (EFR 133)
   e. partial equivalence

This expression, which has been in use since 1820s, originated as a translation from the Greek of Aristophanes' play The Birds, who used it to describe a realm built by the birds to separate the gods from humankind. The word ‘cuckoo’ means ‘crazy’ because it was used in the 19th century to denote a place of wild dreams and unrealistic expectations (TAHDoI 201)

21. run with the hare and hunt with the hounds
   a. He wants to increase the magazine's circulation along with its price? That's trying to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds. (TAHDoI 901)
   b. support two opposing sides at the same time (TAHDoI 901)
   c. istovremeno podržavati dva suprotna stave ili suprotno intersne grupe (HEFR 73)
   d. paliti svijeću i Bogu i vragu, sjediti na dvije stolice (EHFR 100)
   e. zero equivalence

This phraseological unit originated in the 1400s. It was used as a proverb in John Heywood’s collection in 1546. It “allud[es] to being both hunter and hunted at the same time” (TAHDoI 901).

There is one more expressions with the same meaning, which contains an animal – ride two horses at the same time (HEFR 237).
22. separate the sheep from the goats
   a. In a civil war where both sides commit atrocities, you can't separate the sheep from the goats. (TAHDoI 924)
   b. distinguish between good and bad individuals, or superior and inferior ones (TAHDoI 924)
   c. odvojiti dobro od lošeg, biti selektivan (HEFR 301)
   d. odvojiti/odvajati kukolj od pšenice/žita (CEDoI 389)
   e. partial equivalence

This term refers to Jesus's prophecy in the New Testament (Matthew 25:32) that the compassionate (symbolized by sheep) will sit at the right hand of God's and find salvation, while the hard-hearted (symbolized by goats) will sit on the left and eventually be damned (TAHDoI 924).

      pitanjima, ne okolišati (EHFR 211)
   d. ići ravno u glavu (EHFR 211)
   e. zero equivalence

There is one possible explanation for this expression, which has been around since 1840s, but its credibility is questionable. It might have originated in a story about a white man who hunted with an Indian man. When they wanted to divide the game, the white man said: "I'll take the turkey and you the buzzard, or you take the buzzard and I the turkey," and the Indian replied, "Talk turkey to me" (TAHDoI 1050).

26. the birds and the bees
   a. It's time Father told the children about the birds and the bees. (TAHDoI 102)
   b. sex and reproduction (DoAI 46)
   c. oplodnja i razmnožavanje (EHFR 18)
   d. što rade pčelice na cvijeću (EHFR 18)
   e. partial equivalence

This idiom, which was also used in 1928 by Cole Porter in his song "Let's Do It, Let's Fall in Love”, dates back to the second half of the 19th century. It alludes to animal’s sexual behaviour, but it implies the human sexual behaviour (TAHDoI 102).

27. the cat’s pyjamas/pajamas
   a. the best person, idea, thing, etc. (OID 53)
   b. Compliments to the chef. The turkey is excellent. Cat’s pajamas! (EHFR 164)

   c. uobražena, samodopadna osoba
   d. bog i batina (CEDoI 65)
   e. zero equivalence

This expression is based on the cock’s way of walking proud and domineering in the barnyard. Its usage dates back to mid-1800s (TAHDoI 202).

29. the worm has turned
   a. He bullied his assistant for years, but one day the worm turned and he walked out without notice, taking along his best clients. (TAHDoI 1181)
   b. even a very tolerant person will one day lose patience (TAHDoI 1181)
   c. stanje je postalo nepodnošljivo (EHFR 227)
   d. što je previše, previše je, sad je prekipjelo (EHFR 227)
   e. zero equivalence

The phraseological unit was recorded in John Heywood's collection (1546), and it comes from the proverb: “Tread on a worm and it will turn” (TAHDoI 1181).

30. white elephant
   a. The salesman has been trying to get rid of that car for more than a year. It costs too much to run and insure, so no one wants it—it’s a white elephant. (ITL 98)
   b. an item that no one wants to buy or that is difficult to get rid of; a costly but useless possession (ITL 98)
   c. skup i beskoristan predmet (EFR 264)
   d. bačen novac (EHFR 62)
   e. zero equivalence

In the Loop (p. 98), Dictionary of Idioms (p. 199), The American Heritage Dictionary of Idioms (p. 1161-1162) and Oxford Idiom Dictionary (p. 446) are unanimous about the origin of the expression ‘white elephant’. It comes from the practice of the Siamese kings who would give this rare animal to those they did not like. The new owner of this animal could not kill the animal, but that person had to spend a lot of money on looking after the elephant. The high expenses would gradually ruin the owner.

5 Conclusion

This research, which is based on analysis of 30 phraseological units containing animals in English, as the source language, and Croatian, as the target language, shows that the major part of phraseological units in English do not have a corresponding counterpart in Croatian. From 30 expressions in English, there are 19 dictionary equivalents, which can be labelled as zero equivalents. However, it is important to mention that 5 of them do contain an animal species in the expression – for instance, act/play goat and ‘izvoditi bijesne gliste’, be in the catbird seat and ‘biti na konju’. The second most frequent type of equivalent is partial equivalent. There are 10 partial equivalents in the target language, 4 of which contain an animal species in the expression – for example, be like a bull in a china shop and ‘kao slon u staklani’, buy a pig in a poke and ‘kupiti mačka u vreći’. In the entire analysis, there was only one expression, which can be regarded as a complete equivalent – have kittens and ‘dobiti mačiče’. It can be concluded that although both English and Croatian have a lot of phraseological units containing animals, they are not compatible when regarded in the sense of contrastive analysis.

The entire corpus, which consists of 628 phraseological units, show that the most frequent animal species used in the expressions in the source language, i.e. English, is a bird. However, it must be taken into consideration that the number of the expressions with ‘bird’ also includes its subtypes, such as ‘lark’, ‘crow’, ‘catbird’, etc. In total, there are 80 out of 628 phraseological units which contain a bird as a constituent. The second most frequently used animal species is a horse, which is mentioned 68 times, followed by a dog, which is mentioned 66 times.

The origin of phraseological units in the source language shows that they are mostly based on biblical stories, some historical and cultural events, beliefs or traditions and literature, especially fables.

It can be concluded that there are some similarities between English and Croatian phraseological units, but mostly in the connotative sense. As it can be seen both in the analysis of the phraseological units and the entire corpus, these two languages have a vocabulary filled with various phraseological units containing animals, which are used in different domains of life.

Appendix 2: Diagram of frequency of animal species in phraseological units

The diagram represents the frequency of a particular animal species in phraseological units in the corpus. There are 628 phraseological units in the corpus. It must be mentioned that the subtypes of the species are included in the categories ‘bird’, ‘bug’ and ‘fish’. The category bird also contains phraseological units with lark, pigeon, jaybird, parrot, crow, hawk, dove, catbird, owl, lovebird, cuckoo, albatross, magpie, eagle, swan, and halcyon. The category bug includes the following species: ant, butterfly, flea, fly, grasshopper, leech, mosquito, moth, roach, and worm. Finally, the category fish also contains phraseological units with ‘sardine’ and ‘trout’.

The most frequent animal species in phraseological units with animals is ‘bird’ (80 out of 628), followed by ‘horse’ (68 out of 628) and ‘dog’ (66 out of 628). There are eleven animal species, which are mentioned only once. For example: camel, leopard, ox, racoon, snail, etc.
Appendix 3: Diagram of frequency of phraseological units in dictionaries

This diagram shows the appearance of analysed phraseological units in 13 dictionaries, which were used for the construction of the corpus. Three phraseological units, which are the most frequent are: 'a fly in the ointment', 'cock-and-bull story' and 'have a bee in one's bonnet'. They appeared in 11 out of 13 dictionaries. The phraseological unit 'act/play goat' appears only in two dictionaries.
Appendix 4: Diagram of frequency of lexical equivalence

This diagram shows the frequency of lexical equivalence of the thirty analysed phraseological units. The most frequent type is zero equivalence – 19 phraseological units out of 30. There are 10 partial equivalents in the target language, i.e. Croatian. Only one phraseological unit completely corresponds to the one in English.
